To help you understand how the Crane Simulator works.Q: Is there a way to switch a Windows partition on a machine after it has been shutdown? I want to switch my Windows 10 boot partition on a machine after it has been shutdown. It will have been hibernated on my local machine. I would not use System Restore. I have seen before that when a machine is shut down, it may put the boot partition in a bad state. A: To do this, you should be able to first mount the hard drive in question and ensure the boot sector is valid. Then, you should be able to fix the boot sector by running the system boot manager with the following command: bootrec.exe /RebuildBcd To mount the drive, you can use the mount command or follow the instructions found here. If you mount the drive and run the bootrec command, you should be good to go. 82157476af
